View three major exhibitions by artists Kader Attia, Emeka Ogboh, and Michael Landy this Winter 2018 at The Power Plant Contemporary Art Gallery

On view from 27 January to 13 May 2018, see exhibitions by artists from different global regions, as they draw connections from their own histories to urgent matters and themes pertinent to Canada’s current social and political landscape.

Join us as we launch the season with a FREE Public Opening Party on Friday, 26 January 2018 from 8-11PM.

Kader Attia creates works that explore the notion of repair as both a physical and symbolic act. His first Canadian solo exhibition The Field of Emotion brings together recent and newly commissioned works that confront us with traumas of the past and their spectres in the present. As the artist states, “Our contemporary world is haunted by the wounds of the past.”

Emeka Ogboh frequently explores conditions of listening and sound as a medium of intervention and knowledge exchange. Titled The Song of the Germans, his installation at The Power Plant raises questions of national identity, citizenship and belonging and is a timely examination of issues felt increasingly all across the globe, including in Canada — from matters such as the creation of a national narrative, to migration and movement, and the marginalisation of voices.

Michael Landy continues his process-based approach in DEMONSTRATION, The Power Plant’s third Fleck Clerestory Commission Project, by inviting the public to participate in creating a wall of protest. Landy continues to transform the public’s submissions of images, words, texts or slogans that map their feelings, reactions and experiences of living in Canada into protest drawings pinned directly onto the walls of The Power Plant.

The Power Plant also presents numerous opportunities for all to extend their exhibition experience. Whether through an artmaking workshop, a film screening, meditation, a tour or a writing workshop, pair a visit to the gallery with a favourite activity.

Kader Attia

The Field of Emotion

Curator: Carolin Köchling, Curator of Exhibitions
Assistant Curator: Nabila Abdel Nabi, Assistant Curator

In The Field of Emotion, Kader Attia continues to deepen the notion of repair as both a physical and symbolic act. In this context, repair does not mean to fix things in order to return them to their original state. On the contrary, Attia’s works point to the fact that wounds and injuries of the past never disappear: they seek repair endlessly.

Works on view include J’accuse I accuse. Inspired by the injury and disfigurement of soldiers during World War I, the installation consists of roughly-hewn wooden busts of wounded soldiers, facing the eponymous anti-war film by French film director Abel Gance. Originally made in 1919, the film was reshot in 1938, featuring footage of these veterans, as a warning against the looming threat of war. The film Reflecting Memory (2016) takes up the subject of the phantom limb. Featuring interviews with surgeons, neurologists, psychiatrists, psychoanalysts, historians, musicians and a dancer, the film explores the underlying causes of psychological pain that manifests physically. Finally, it draws a link between a lost part of the body and a lost part of society through trauma. The Field of Emotion furthermore presents a newly commissioned installation of railway ties that recall the traumas brought about by railways around the globe, as well as a film installation. The film essay brings together voices from the fields of psychiatry, anthropology, musicology, history and art history that speak to Canada’s history of colonization and slavery, and the impact that these wounds, and their denial, have on the individual and collective body.

Emeka Ogboh

The Song of the Germans

Curator: Nabila Abdel Nabi, Assistant Curator

Through his audio installations, Emeka Ogboh explores how sound captures existential relationships, frames our understanding of the world, and provides a context in which to ask critical questions around immigration, globalization and post colonialism.

For Ogboh’s first exhibition in Canada, The Power Plant presents the artist’s ten-channel sound installation The Song of the Germans (Deutschlandlied) (2015), which debuted at the 2015 Venice Biennale. The installation features the recorded voices of African immigrants to Germany singing the German national anthem in their native languages, including Igbo, Yoruba, Bamoun, More, Twi, Ewondo, Sango, Douala, Kikongo and Lingala. Each voice is projected through an individual speaker, placed at the height of the singer, so that the viewer experiences every voice singularly and as part of a united polyphonic choral effect. By engaging African immigrants to Germany to sing the Deutschlandlied, Ogboh raises questions of national identity and the changing face of Germany. At its original presentation in 2015, the installation was prescient of comparable political tensions in France, the United Kingdom, the United States and elsewhere. The work addresses forms of belonging and the realities of access and acceptance in a seemingly globalized world. In a time when one’s accent or dialect can be cause for denial of asylum, the artist orients our attention to the voices of those who have been marginalized.

In conjunction with his exhibition, as part of the Scotiabank CONTACT Photography Festival Emeka Ogboh will present his work WER HAT ANGST VOR SCHWARZ: Casino Baden-Baden series (2017), as a large-format billboard on The Power Plant’s south façade.

Michael Landy

DEMONSTRATION

Curator: Nabila Abdel Nabi, Assistant Curator

Michael Landy’s practice explores attitudes toward materialism, consumption and the cultural value of objects. He is known for his large-scale commissions including Semi-detached (2004), an exact 1:1 replica of his parent’s home, and Break Down (2001), the systematic destruction of each and every one of his personal belongings. Over the course of two weeks, audiences watched as Landy, aided by an assembly line of workers, shredded and crushed all 7,227 of his personal possessions. The work was a monumental emptying of the artist’s material possessions as a critique of consumerism. In a later work, Art Bin (2010/14), Landy created a giant receptacle for discarded works as a “monument to creative failure.”

Landy’s process-based approach continues in his installation at The Power Plant, the artist’s first exhibition in Canada and the third edition of the gallery’s Fleck Clerestory Commission Program. Through an open call distributed to the public, DEMONSTRATION aims to create a bridge of communication for the urgent voices of today and multiplicity of narratives and histories that define Canada.
The artist invites the public to participate in the installation by submitting images, symbols, texts and slogans that represent their hopes and fears, what makes them happy, angry or sad, issues they want to oppose or champion. Over the course of the exhibition, select submissions will be translated into red and white drawings which will be pinned directly on to the wall of the Fleck Clerestory as an in situ installation evolving over six months. Through collaboration, the demonstration will grow, thus capturing Canada’s social and political landscape through the eyes of its inhabitants.

OPEN CALL: Participate in Michael Landy’s exhibition by sending in your own submissions. Learn more about the open call and submission guidelines here.
