Naufus Ramírez-Figueroa

Asymmetries

Curator: Lauren Barnes
Assistant Curator: Justine Kohleal

Naufus Ramírez-Figueroa produces sculptures, performance works and paintings that draw on literature, Latin American history, folklore, contemporary conspiracy theories and childhood memories. Referring to traumatic or tragic events – in particular Guatemala’s civil war (1960–96), which forced Ramírez-Figueroa and certain members of his family to immigrate to Vancouver as refugees in the 1980s – his works are imbued with a playful, sometimes dream-like quality. Using both sculptural objects and his body, Ramírez-Figueroa creates scenarios and installations that bring to light unbalanced power relationships in the history of Guatemala and beyond.

Asymmetries encompasses works from the past decade in addition to three new commissions. In two new sculptures, Ramírez-Figueroa reimagines the narratives of traditional and colonial objects – specifically, the Wardian case and the cacaxte – in relation to his own history, investigating the ways in which personal and cultural identities might expand and evolve over time. Heart of the Scarecrow, a newly commissioned performance video, looks back at the staging of a play of the same name by Guatemalan playwright Hugo Carrillo (1929–1994). Upon learning that a version of the same play involving Ramírez-Figueroa’s uncle was violently censored by the 1975 Guatemalan government, the artist became interested in its anti-establishment message, reimagining it several times in different media and locales. For the iteration at The Power Plant, Ramírez-Figueroa restages the production at the Universidad Popular in Guatemala City, the original site of the censorship.

The artist’s reimagining of these objects and stories calls to attention what has been lost, manipulated or left out of the colonizer’s history. Simultaneously, Ramírez-Figueroa’s artworks evoke the burdens that are carried – collectively and individually, physically and psychologically – and underline the importance of the imagination in overcoming them.

Dawit L. Petros

Spazio Disponibile

Guest Curator: Irene Campolmi
Assistant Curator: Amin Alsadad, Nancy McCain & Bill Morneau Curatorial Fellow

Dawit L. Petros presents a new body of work that underlines the unexplored links between colonization, migrations and modernism. Spazio Disponibile—Italian for ‘Available Space’—scrutinizes historical gaps in European memory, particularly that of modern Italy. Alluding to vacant advertising sections that appeared in Rivista Coloniale, a widely circulated early 20th century magazine and the official organ of the Italian colonial project, the title is also a reference to the colonial gaze that viewed the lands of Africa as ‘available space’ to occupy and exploit.

Petros’s art reflects his research into the complex layers of colonial and postcolonial histories connecting East Africa and Europe. Employing archival materials collected over a period of seven years, documents that attest to the Italian presence in Ethiopia and Eritrea between the late 19th and early 20th centuries, Petros has developed an expansive suite of works that reflect on the lingering effects of colonial memory. Composed of a multimedia installation of serigraphs, photographs, sculptural works, a film and soundscape, the works highlight the ties between the contemporary resurgence of nationalism in Italy and a suppressed colonial past.

The exhibition extends the artist’s ongoing project, The Stranger’s Notebook—the result of a thirteen-month journey exploring mobilities within Africa and across the Mediterranean—to focus on built forms including architecture, industries and infrastructures, as well as questions of labour, the pitfalls of nationhood and intertwined narratives of migration. A newly commissioned film on Montreal’s Casa d’Italia, a community centre built in 1936, probes the building’s graphic and architectural language to unpack its complicated fascist symbolism. Examining parallels between African histories and European modernism, the exhibition also investigates how objects operate as texts in the construction and transmission of cultural ideologies. Petros looks at how these objects often obscure power differentials while connecting people across borders, binding disparate geographies such as Italy, Eritrea and Canada.

Naeem Mohaiemen

_What we found after you left_

Curator: Lauren Barnes

Naeem Mohaiemen grew up in Dhaka, Bangladesh and now lives in New York. His work across films, installations and essays excavates historical moments via fiction, documentary and archives. Overlapping micro stories and macro histories underpin his projects, which start from transnational leftist utopian projects that took place in the 1970s, the first decade of Mohaiemen’s life and a period of clashes between decolonization, socialism, non-alignment movements and new forms of imperialism.

This exhibition spans two seasons, presenting four films in a rotating program. Each film is called a ‘chapter’ accompanied variously by photographs, prints and sculptures that serve as ‘footnotes’, which further expand on the films’ themes.

Screening from 25 January to 15 March, the three-channel film _Two Meetings and a Funeral_ (2017) probes a pivot of power in the 1970s from the Non-Aligned Movement (the anti-imperialist coalition of states not allied to the United States or the Soviet Union) toward the Organization of Islamic Cooperation (an alliance of Muslim-majority countries). Images of triumphalist transnational architecture and documentary footage from the 1973 political congress come together in a narrative woven by publisher Samia Zennadi, political leader Zonayed Saki and historian Vijay Prashad that uncovers a history of the Cold War period from a previously hidden perspective.

From 18 March until 10 May, the exhibition concludes with _Afsan’s Long Day, The Young Man Was: Part 2_ (2014), a film that considers parallel histories of radical struggles in the 1970s. Accounts from the 1974 diary of Bangladeshi historian Afsan Chowdhury and footage relating to the militant Red Army Faction in Germany form part of a wide-ranging investigation into the stories of people that shaped what the narrator describes as “the ‘what if’ moment of the last century.”

While both films focus on moments of misrecognition and failure, Mohaiemen’s overarching investigation into the various ways in which the political left attempted to implement socialist utopia(s) during the Cold War era is ultimately rooted in a hope for a future international left.

Anxious Audience

Curator: Lauren Barnes
Assistant Curator: Amin Alsaiden, Nancy McCain & Bill Morneau Curatorial Fellow

For his first solo presentation in Canada, American artist Rashid Johnson has undertaken a major new site-specific work. This is the fifth iteration of the Clerestory Commission Program, which invites artists to respond to The Power Plant’s central, light-filled space.

Johnson has attained prominence internationally for works harnessing the rich symbolism and histories of varied materials that are both naturally occurring and artificially made. He is renowned for minimalist black grid constructions that serve as carriers for plants, shea butter and other artefacts—objects that reference collective aspects of African-American intellectual history and cultural identity.

Since 2015, his output has encompassed representational works entitled Anxious Audiences. For The Power Plant, Johnson developed an ambitious new work in this series that envelops visitors amongst an accumulation of portraits incised into a mixture of West African black soap and wax, which sits atop white tile panels. Reflecting a sense of collective unease, this crowd of faces emerges through a process of ‘drawing through erasure’ into the viscous black surfaces.
